Jet Ski Safety -- Unseen Hazard

On a sunny July day, a young woman wearing only a bikini swimsuit was a passenger on a jet ski at Lake Lanier. During a turn she fell off the back of the jetski. Unfortunately she sustained severe orifice injuries as a result of the jet thrust from the jetski.

What did she do wrong? Nothing. Jet ski manufacturers are aware of this hazard, but consumers are not. The warnings given to consumers are inadequate.

What could she have done to prevent this injury? It is as simple as wearing a wet suit bottom.

Jet Ski Protection

1. Eye protection
2. Personal Flotation Device
3. Gloves
4. Wet suit or wet suit bottom
5. Foot protection

Water Walking Balls

CPSC Warns of Deadly Danger with Water Walking Balls

Risks associated with the use of water walking balls include the potential for suffocation, drowning and impact injuries.

An individual climbs into the large see-through plastic ball; it is inflated with a blower through a zipper opening and the zipper is closed making the ball air-tight. The ball, with the person inside, then rolls around on a number of surfaces, including water, ice or grass.

The product has no emergency exit and can be opened only by a person outside of the ball. This heightens the risk of injury or death when a person inside the ball experiences distress.
